
AGM Timing

Posted by evadav - 2010/01/15 14:24

I have been a shareholder of a small company for 3 years and to date there has not been an AGM. What does UK Company Law require on frequency of AGMs?

=====

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by Bette - 2010/02/05 15:46

Since 2007 , the Companies Act 2006 no longer requires private companies to hold AGMs. The company's Articles of Association may, however, do so.

=====

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by evadav - 2010/02/06 11:44

Thanks for your input

=====

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by flowghans - 2010/03/12 07:06

However, for the vast majority of shareholders, better corporate governance requires the directors, through the chairman, to present their comments much closer to when annual results are released.

=====

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by addniim - 2010/04/04 14:41

flowghans wrote:

However, for the vast majority of shareholders, better corporate governance requires the directors, through the chairman, to present their comments much closer to when annual results are released.

I guess so !

I think a lot of companys must have a idea from most of shareholders.

Good Luck !

=====

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by Pinal - 2010/04/16 04:46

The restructuring leaves Premier as a fully independent oil company in a good position to follow its strategy of value creation and early realisation through oil and gas exploration and commercial deal-making.:angry:

=====

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by mtptl - 2010/07/30 07:47

Making a speech after dinner at your AGM is the perfect way to add a little light relief to the evening. Remember that an AGM can be a pretty heavy-going affair and, while you donâ€™t want to belittle the importance of such a meeting, itâ€™s good be able to make the tone a little more upbeat during your speech.

AGM dinners usually take the format of a meeting that reviews the previous year, followed by a meal to act as a "thank you" for the hard work over the year. Consequently, such meetings are usually held at a local hotel or restaurant with a meeting room, with attendees dressed in smart clothes (often even black tie), having arranged babysitters and transport. This means that the evening needs to be both informative and relatively entertaining - of course, you don't need to be doing some slap-stick routine, but assuming that the majority of the serious issues will have been covered in the AGM itself, your speech can afford to be a little more light-hearted.

Restaurants Kent
artificial stone fireplace burlington

Re:AGM Timing

Posted by maha - 2010/08/12 11:01

The AGM VSR-10 is a clone of the Tokyo Marui VSR-10, as is the JG BAR-10, TSD VSR-10, Swiss Arms VSR-10 and all other knock offs. These guns are cheap and have been upgraded to the 380-400 fps range to appeal to the noobies. They may give you a stronger spring, but they don't give you stronger sears. Sears are what lock the piston back when racking back the bolt. The trigger releases them, thus releasing the piston and firing the BB. These sears are made of pot metal and WILL break. I guarantee it. It's only a matter of time. They could strip in a few days, weeks, months whatever. The amount of time it works depends on how lucky you are. So when buying this type of gun, you should know how to fix it, and while you're at it you should upgrade everything else. It's a very simple platform, actually. There are many youtube videos on disassembly. Know that these upgrades will cost a good amount of money. A steel sear set alone costs 50 bucks. If you must get a clone, go with the JG BAR-10. At least that has a rubberized stock. Nice feel. Too bad the sears on mine broke within a week, and even the new sears broke under a heavier spring... I gave up on it. Sniping just isn't my thing anyway. I believe Airsoftgi now sells a pre-upgraded Socom Gear VSR-10. Its around 250 bucks or so. You might want to look at that. I'll link it to you. If you need any help, shoot me an email.

seo | link building
